Programme Overview

BA Environment, Politics and Philosophy is offered as one of the University's suite of courses in Applied Humanities. It has been designed to enable you to acquire specialised subject knowledge, develop practical and professional skills and apply both to current challenges, issues and debates.

We know that we face acute environmental challenges, and that we can't postpone changing the ways in which we think and act if we are to address these. We also know that environmental science, on its own, won't be able to do this – that solutions lie in understanding how we think, how we respond emotionally to the world around us, and how we see ourselves within it.

This course is especially designed to enable you to apply your broad understanding of political and philosophical ideas to current environmental challenges and dilemmas. It poses fundamental questions about how we live and work in the present, and seeks to answer some of these through the development of your skills in critical thinking, project design and implementation, advocacy and communication. Drawing on a wide range of subjects and disciplines in the Humanities, Sciences, and Social Sciences, this course places the environment at the heart of what you'll study, as well as forming the basis for the practical projects you might undertake.

Above all, you'll be able to work on a series of projects which look out from the University and into the city and region – or further afield, in some instances. We want you to be able to develop demonstrable skills and experience, which may include leading a project team, evaluating and acting on alternative responses to a defined challenge, or pitching an idea to one of our many partner organisations, and wherever possible following this through to implementation.

Programme Aims

1. To explore the social, cultural and political factors that shape human relations with other living beings and more-than-human environments, and vice versa;
2. To combine ecologically-oriented approaches across a range of disciplines in the humanities, social sciences, and sciences, in order to understand today's complex environmental challenges;
3. To locate the study of humanity's relationship with the environment in broader cultural, intellectual and political contexts, and to make connections between cognate areas of study;
4. To create opportunities in which academic skills, knowledge and experience can be applied to practical projects, and then enhanced through the further development of professional practice, techniques and approaches;
5. To encourage flexible, sceptical and enquiring approaches to learning, independence of thought, creativity and collaboration
6. To combine respect, sensitivity and empathy with the rigorous analysis of different cultures, systems and perspectives.

Assessment methods

A range of summative assessment tasks will be used to test the Intended Learning Outcomes in each module. These are indicated in the attached assessment map which shows which tasks are used in which modules.

Students will be supported in their development towards summative assessment by appropriate formative exercises.

Please note: if you choose an optional module from outside this programme, you may be required to undertake a summative assessment task that does not appear in the assessment grid here in order to pass that module.

Work experience and placement opportunities

As this is an applied course, there are opportunities throughout to use your knowledge, analysis and skills in a variety of different ways, including through project-related work inside and outside the University. The following modules have been explicitly designed to incorporate professional development, opportunities for working with external partners and placements of varying lengths and complexity. The University will support you in making the most of these opportunities, and in ensuring that they work for you in relation to the skills you want to develop, your ambitions and aspirations, and the needs of those with whom we work.
