Programme Overview

This innovative MSc in Criminology delivered as a distance-learning programme allows you to develop specialist knowledge of the current themes and policy debates surrounding crime, criminal justice, crime control, policing, penology and offender management. It equips you with the intellectual, analytical and research skills needed for understanding and applying criminological theories and concepts in practice. The programme also provides an in-depth understanding of the interactions between politics, criminology and criminal justice on a national and international level, and the impact of public policy in these areas. You will be taught by experts from criminological, sociological and legal backgrounds with professional criminal justice experience. You will also benefit from research-led teaching, as well as strong links to wider criminal justice professions and industry.

In this thought-provoking programme, you will explore the changing contours of national and international criminal justice and engage with mainstream theoretical approaches as well as newer concepts in criminology that act as a catalyst and provocation for development of our knowledge of crime. You will examine contemporary and critical issues in crime, policing and justice, which will encourage you to find innovative ways to deal with national, international and transnational challenges for criminal justice systems worldwide. You will also be equipped with the necessary analytical and methodological tools to understand and implement evaluation and evidence-based practice in criminal justice. The thorough engagement with quantitative and qualitative research methods and their application in your dissertation will further encourage you to find innovative approaches or solutions to key issues criminal justice professions are faced with.

Delivered by our experienced team of academic experts and practitioners, the programme aims to provide you with an active overall learning environment to help you strengthen your opportunities for future job markets. This MSc in Criminology is offered as an online, distancelearning curriculum to suit those of you that seek a range of specialist skills that include research, analytical, practical and communication skills, and that are not only relevant to a career within criminal justice, but that are transferable to any field of professional employment. The range of online learning tools we offer are designed to develop your competencies in online communication and team working. The interactive teaching and learning is delivered via Bath Spa University's virtual learning environment, Minerva.

Recognising your evolving needs as a student and professional, as well as the pressures of the modern workplace, this MSc uniquely allows you to not only choose between studying full-time or part-time, but gives you the opportunity to transfer to a campus-based version of the programme, should this better suit your circumstances.

Programme Aims

1. To enable you to develop your intellectual, critical and analytic skills in the academic areas of criminology and criminal justice.
2. To provide you with a combination of compulsory modules that equip you with an advanced understanding of the key theoretical and political debates, and concepts within criminology and criminal justice, as well as the ability to use this knowledge in the critical assessment and development of public policy and academic interventions.
3. To support you to develop a range of the key skills necessary for the successful management of continuous career and professional development, life-long learning and further postgraduate study.
4. To support you to acquire quantitative and qualitative research method skills in a way that is consistent with the demands of the discipline and the professional market.
5. To enhance your transferable skills including proficiency in oral and written communication; the capacity for independent learning; the ability to reflect on the ethical and ideological components of your work; and the capacity for working co-operatively with others to produce professional outputs in a timely fashion.
