Programme Overview:

Contemporary Arts Practice is a multidisciplinary course that offers you the opportunity to study two areas of art and design practice simultaneously.

Disciplines include painting, ceramics, mixed-media textiles, graphic arts, sculpture, printmaking, photography, performance and digital media.

The multidisciplinary nature of the programme encourages synthesis of materials, methods and thinking, fostering inquisitive, experimental and playful making that will challenge yourself and established notions of art and design practice.

With the support of a community of students and staff you will learn to develop your individual practice through a balance of material exploration, practical making and conceptual thinking.

The initial stages of the course are structured to introduce you to, and equip you with, the skills and confidence to work within your disciplines, and prepare you for an independent programme of negotiated study.

Teaching consists of practical instruction and demonstration, academic and technical workshops, lectures, study visits and seminars. Individual and group tutorials are vital to our teaching, through these and a range of visual and verbal assessments, you will receive critical and supportive feedback on your practice.

Integration of context with practice is essential for the successful contemporary artist/designer, so you will undertake a programme of historical and critical contextual analysis that is designed to encourage you to research, understand and critically reflect on art and design practice.

The development of your professionalism and life/work skills is central to the programme. Through live projects, collaborations with external institutions, exhibitions, competitions and lectures by visiting practitioners, you will be given the opportunity to develop your professional confidence and skills.

These outward facing projects encourage collaborative working, problem solving and entrepreneurship, preparing you for work as a professional artist/designer or as an employee within the creative industries.

Programme Aims

1. To enable the development of students' individual contemporary art practice through a flexible and multidisciplinary programme of study.
2. To foster engagement with a range of subject specific conceptual and technical skills, that develops students' confidence and ability to research, observe, communicate, innovate and exhibit artwork to a high standard.
3. To stimulate students' critical self-awareness and independent judgment, so as to develop an ambitious, enquiring, analytical, ethical and sustainable approach to art practice.
4. To develop an awareness of contemporary and historical, cultural, social and theoretical debates across contemporary art disciplines, that encourages critical contextual reflection.

5. To equip students with individual, collaborative and transferable skills that will enhance their employability as a practitioner or employee in the creative industries.
